Turning a small bathroom into a cutting-edge space is possible with Alexia matt black

Having a small bathroom is a real challenge for interior design, but that does not mean it should be any less welcoming. When you create an understated design, the space can become a bathroom that feels roomy and attractive, offering the wellbeing needed for the most intimate moment of the day and for daily personal hygiene. With the right elements, you can find everything you need in the bathroom, resulting in an avant-garde room that is a pleasure to step into.

Bathroom with a matt black single-lever basin tap from the Alexia collection by Ramon Soler®

Ramon Soler® is at the forefront of trends and is clear that offering the best products with the most advanced technology is the key to making a bathroom shine. Taps are the main element of this room, and black is on trend: a timeless colour that combines perfectly with any other, representing the elegance and good taste of the most avant-garde interiors. Adding a black detail draws people's attention to that particular point, which exudes pure distinction and invites admiration from anyone who enters the bathroom. For the matt black finish, a different technique is used to achieve the desired matt effect: a sophisticated electrostatic bath over galvanised metal, which gives it a durability in the salt spray test ten times greater than chrome. Trends in architecture and interior design are turning once more to black, which never goes out of fashion and is now a must in the most contemporary bathrooms.

Bathroom with a matt black single-lever basin tap and concealed shower set from the Alexia collection by Ramon Soler®

The Alexia collection by Ramon Soler® had already won us over with its exquisite design, but this time it captivates us once again with its new matt black finish. The Alexia collection sets out to win over the most exclusive bathrooms with a new finish that is as elegant as it is avant-garde, embracing the latest trends. Its design, inspired by conical, ergonomic forms, achieves a delicate yet striking effect, with a conical spout crowned by a lever with soft, minimalist lines. The volumes of the tap and the interplay of its dimensions make Alexia a tap of ideal harmony, delivering total comfort for the user. For the brand, quality is the highest priority when manufacturing taps, which is why it does not paint them, but instead uses far more advanced techniques that offer maximum resistance to everyday use. The matt black finish of the Ramon Soler collections is excellent, providing resistance and durability. The matt black finish is achieved with a sophisticated electrostatic bath over galvanised metal, which gives it a durability in the salt spray test ten times greater than chrome. The Alexia collection is very comprehensive; in this bathroom we can see it fully equipped with a concealed shower set and a concealed single-lever basin mixer, both in matt black. A black basin tap is perfect for playing with contrasts. Combining the white of the basin with the black of the tap creates a visual effect of cleanliness and elegance in the bathroom. Another option offered by coloured taps is to blend them completely into the bathroom, by choosing a basin in the same colour as the tap.
